HOW TO TELL IF YOUR BABY IS GETTING ENOUGH MILK:

Every mother-baby pair is different! That makes it hard to say exactly how your baby should be eating but here are some guidelines:

In the first few days, your baby is getting rich, yellow colostrum (first milk). This is all your baby needs.

Ways to make sure your baby is getting enough milk:

In the first 24-48 hours,

- attempt to breastfeed whenever your baby is awake, or every 3 hours.
- Practice skin-to-skin care as much as possible.
- It is common for newborns to “cluster feed” (need to be breastfeeding very frequently) for a daily 4-6 hour stretch, often followed by a long period of sleep. This is normal behavior and helps stimulate an ample milk supply as your baby becomes an expert at latching and removing milk.

In days 3 to 5 (48 to 120 hours after baby was born):

- Breastfeed at least 8 or more times in 24 hours.
- At least 3-4 wet diapers per day by day 3 of life
- The normal change in stools over the first 2-5 days of life: meconium (dark green, tarry) to transitional stools (lighter green or brown) to true breastmilk stools (yellow, seedy, or loose). The number of stools will increase each day.

After 3-5 days, when your milk increases, you will also notice:

- Your breasts feel full before a feeding and softer afterwards,
- A letdown sensation or milk dripping from the other breast,
- You can hear your baby swallow,
- You can see milk in your baby's mouth,
- The processed product (stool!) coming out the other end!

- Breastfeed about 10-20 minutes at each feeding
- Be happy during and after a feeding
- Gain about 4-7 oz per week (after a small weight loss the first week)
- Return to birth weight by 2 weeks of age
- Have 6 or more pale colored, wet diapers in 24 hours
- Have 4-12 stools in 24 hours
- Be alert and bright-eyed for several periods each day

Call your baby's doctor if:

- Your infant sucks only briefly, very softly or irregularly
- Your baby is very jaundiced (yellow) and getting more yellow
- You have severe, constant nipple pain
- Your baby fights the breast or cries after a minute or two
- Your baby has fewer than 6 wet diapers a day
- Your baby has little or no stool, or has dark green mucus stools
- Your baby seems weak, tired, or not interested in feeding
